- Today we get to experience a lesser-explored part of the island. Our drive takes us along majestic East Iceland, with gorgeous scenery that includes tranquil fishing villages, narrow fjords, rugged tundra and sweeping landscapes.
- Among other highlights, you will stop in the small villages of Stöðvarfjörður and Faskrúðsfjörður. A truly unique village in Iceland, Faskrúðsfjörður was founded in 1880 and, until 1935, was the main hub for French fishermen off the East of Iceland. The French developed the town as a trading post and fishing village, building a French hospital and chapel. The French flavour has endured and the village remains charming. You will also have the chance to view a charming northern lights photo exhibition called Auroras Iceland, which is held in an old house. The location of the village, with such little light pollution, is an ideal location to spot the northern lights and the photo exhibition demonstrates that perfectly.
- Meanwhile, Stöðvarfjörður is small, friendly, classically Icelandic village known for its beautiful mountainous surroundings. There is a lot of life in this small town as you can find a few small cafes, artist workshops, stores and a popular swimming pool.
- The final destination of the day is the otherworldly Lake Mývatn region. Here you have the option of relaxing in the warm geothermal pools and saunas at the Mývatn Nature Baths (must be pre-booked), with a view to mountains and lava fields. The milky blue water is known for its healing effect and soothes the skin. It's the perfect way to end a busy day of sightseeing.
- The Lake Mývatn area is known for being one of the best places in Iceland to view the northern lights due to the altitude and the lay of the land. We therefore highly recommend that you are on the lookout for the Aurora Borealis tonight!

- It's incredible to watch the roaring water thunder and tumble metres below.
- The tour will continue to Akureyri, the largest town outside Reykjavík, where you can enjoy the afternoon at leisure. Akureyri offers a variety of cosy cafés, small shops and interesting places to go for a walk such as the historical town center. Hraunfossar is a thrilling series of waterfalls that seemingly originating in a field without a river or lake. The water is actually streaming through rivulets in a lava field.
